significantly longer than what was told to us when we originally set the service up. There has been no dispute regarding the contract. Every call you make which states that I have somehow put the contract into dispute is factually wrong.

Is it your intention to stop delivery of our belongings in breach of contract? If the answer is 'no' then there is no dispute. We simply want you to do the job you agreed to do and to be aware that your salespeople verbally quote "5 business days" and not "up to 21 days".

Please clarify whether it is your intention to change in any way the terms of delivery outlined in the contract (ie delivery on or before August 23rd). That is all I need to know.

Your Father in Law Lawrence has delayed your delivery again. Really? What is wrong with you guys?
